Bowling dead sea

The Dead Sea consists of 10 percent salt. Almost anything that you throw inside the Dead Sea will float to the top. There are much more interesting facts about the Dead Sea that most people don't know. If you want to float in the Dead Sea, then the only thing that you will have to do is sit back. The salt makes the water dense, making it easy for you to float. You want to avoid putting your face in the water. The salt not only tastes bad, but it can damage your mouth and nose. It is also a good idea to avoid staying inside the water for a long time. You will need to drink plenty of water and take a shower after you get out of the dead sea. A bowling ball is quite heavy, so most people would think it would drop to the bottom. In fact, several people were asked if they thought bowling balls would float or sink. Most of them said it would sink. But one man decided to try it. He threw the bowling ball into the sea, and it floated. Armed with a pale pink 14-lb. bowling ball (pink for good contrast to earth tones), I experimented on various bodies of water around the country until I got to the Dead Sea -- a popular attraction for its unique geological features. Not only is it the lowest point on earth (over 1,380 ft below sea level), but it is also one of the saltiest, with the salinity of the water at about 31% -- that's about 8 times saltier than seawater. And because of this high concentration of natural salt, the density of dead seawater is almost 24% higher than regular water, meaning that many things that don't normally float actually become liquid -- but include it a 14-lb. Bowling ball? Find out: If you do the math, you can calculate the density of a 14-lb. bowling balls, compare it to Dead Sea water, and figure out the answer from there, but there's nothing better than getting an answer through actual experiments. (Plus, it's a lot more fun.) SEE MORE: How it's done: Bowling BallOn a side note: I acquired this bowling ball in Israel, but brought it back with me to the United States.
